Beer holds more CO₂ when it is cooler or under greater pressure. When you drink a beer, there's usually more CO₂ in the beer than the equilibrium value because you took it out of the fridge and released the pressure by opening the bottle. Violà! The gas comes out of solution and bubbles form. Forced Carbonation One way to carbonate is to reverse this process: Cool the beer and apply pressure.

Water: Always use cold, filtered water. To measure the amount of water for each cup, use the coffee cup you are going to use. When it comes to the water to Turkish coffee proportions my rule of thumb is 1½ "cup" of water per cup. Once again, the "cup" measurement is the coffee cup that you are going to serve the coffee in, rather than a standard measuring cup.
