The Java full names and the call spec parameters, which are mapped by position, must correspond one to one. (This rule does not apply to method main. See Example 2.) If the Java method takes no arguments, code an empty parameter list for it but not for the function or procedure. As usual, you write Java full names using dot notation.

I could shoehorn PropertyChangeListener to work by having a "last published object" property, and so published objects. PropertyChangeListeners don't support generics, and are entrenched in property change semantics, rather than pure publish/subscribe. The java.util Observer/Observable pattern would be good, but Observer is a concrete class.
